Description

How to Empower Others to Find their Voice and Establish Clear Boundaries for your Ministry

The "Me Too" movement has brought greater attention to the issue of sexual harassment, its intrinsic nature, and pervasiveness in our culture. A spiritual community and its congregants are not exempt from experiencing and needing to show up differently when confronted with sexual harassment. Unity and its leaders possess the consciousness to help bring about healing by empowering individuals to find their voice and learn how to establish clearer boundaries

But first we must understand the nature of harassment and how to navigate it, both in supporting others and in our ministries. This workshop will explore the important distinction that sexual harassment is not just about sex, but that its roots lie in inequality, arrogance and shame. It will delve into how each one of us participates in perpetuating it through our unconscious beliefs and unintended actions.

Through the sharing of real-life examples, you will be supported in learning communication tools and practices to empower yourself and others who come to you for support, in finding their voice. Importantly you will learn how to create clear boundaries to minimize the possibilities of it occurring in your ministry. Both credentialed and lay leaders will benefit from this workshop.
